Illegals Free Stuff by Monica Showalter

May 2024

Most of us are aware that a system of perverse incentives is incentivizing foreigners to come to the US without legal authorization.

But is anyone aware of how much they're getting? Officials are sneaky about it, flying them in on the sly, sending in unbadged "monitors" telling the public to not take pictures, and often ignoring requests for public records, thumbing their nose at the law.

So Howie Carr, the writer and radio host, went the investigative reporter route since nobody in the mainstream media was doing it, and assembled the data he could locate.

What he found was mind-boggling:

Here's the list of free benefits the state provides for the thousands of illegal aliens in the "migrant shelters."

This all comes from sources, because the state refuses to provide information as mandated under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA).

If we've missed any additional freebies, and we probably have, let us know.

GENERAL WELFARE COSTS FOR ILLEGAL ALIENS:

Free hotel rooms at $150+ a day.

Three meals a day at $64 per person per diem.

Free on-site medical & dental services (including condoms).

Special diet for Ramadan.

Free same-day dry cleaning w/free pick up & delivery.

Free housekeeping twice a week.

Free cell phones, chargers/charging ports.

Free tablets, iPads.

Free clothing, new & used.

Everyone got new free winter coat, gloves and shoes.

Free toiletries (tooth paste, deodorant, special "ethnic" shampoos, skin cream, aspirin, tooth brushes, feminine products).

Most of us have heard of at least some of these things, and yes, they are a lot more than most Americans are ever going to get. Three free meals? With no means testing, just being illegally present is enough?

It's astonishing. Name one country Americans can go to get three free squares a day, plus housing, room service, free clothing, computers and the like? Nothing like a little replacement theory and padding the congressional seats now, is there.?

But it gets worse, much worse.

Illegals get free tax preparation at $350 per family, which is odd stuff with few working, but the name of the game is something different: to get big returns through the "child tax credit" without paying a penny into the system.

They get free attorneys, free Medicaid, free WIC cash for single moms on the go, welfare checks, free Uber services, holiday parties, movie nights at the hotel, free notary services, free English-as-a-second-language courses, 24/7 security, and the list goes on.

On moving day when they finally leave the free hotel, if it ever happens, they get $30,000 in rent assistance for two years, free luggage, free U-Haul boxes, free new beds with free delivery, up to ten items of free furniture, a free "move-in package (plates, towels, cutlery, etc.) Up to $900. Delivered free," as Carr recounts, and then moving on, they get a free case manager to find them a place to stay, free parenting classes, free "early childhood education" and free "life coaches" among a host of other things on Howie's lists.

Sound like a good deal? It is for them. No wonder so many are coming. This ain't no Ellis Island anymore where migrants once checked in, passed inspection and got to work immediately in order to sustain themselves. It's all taxpayer-paid now, meaning, the US is effectively importing a foreign underclass as if the current one weren't sufficient for US needs.

It's lavish, it's bound to have the recipients writing to their relatives back home (or more likely, calling on the free cell phone) to "come on down" because the gravy train is flowing and the streets are paved with gold.

As for the rest of Americans, well, they can shut up and pay taxes, because that's all the Biden administration and its blue-city allies have to offer them.

It's an illegals' world now, and we just live in it.

The West is Green, Pink, Red

by David A. Noebel

I just finished reading Mao's America: A Survivor's Warning by Xi Van Fleet (published by Hachette Book Group, 2023). The author was born and raised in Communist China until she escaped to the US. She was educated in China and was an active part of the Red Guard student movement under Mao Zedong. To put it mildly, she not only has an excellent understanding of Chinese communism, but American communism too. And she isn't afraid to expose both!

Her telling question throughout the book is "Why is Communism not condemned in America and in the West in the same manner that Nazism was rebuked?" The answer to her question is quite simple as Jesse Kelly points out in his book The Anti-Communist Manifesto. America has been swamped with Communist fellow travelers (liberals, socialists, progressives, leftists, greens, pinks, reds, do-gooders, etc. etc.) who defend, cover, twist, turn, interrupt for the Communists at every turn. The New York Times (America's newspaper of record) hasn't missed a chance to defend the Reds for decades. These Communist defenders have implanted themselves in every American institution and Miss Van Fleet isn't afraid to dig them out for all to see.

For example, she notes that the Communist Party USA was founded in 1919. But get this, "More than a hundred years later, CPUSA is still in operation and growing. In December 2021, Senator Richard Blumenthal attended the event to celebrate the 102nd anniversary of the founding of the Communist Party USA in Connecticut to offer his congratulations and present the awards." (p. 274)

Trust me, the Communist Party USA would not have invited the Senator to such an occasion unless they knew that he was a fellow traveler and a friend to their cause!

Throughout her book Miss Van Fleet compares the operations of the Red Chinese with the Red Americans.

It doesn't take an IQ larger than a normal foot size to see the similarities. For example, she has a whole chapter on "Destruction of the Family." How did Mao destroy the Chinese family and how are our leftists doing the same here. We can't even define "woman." And "father" and "mother" are considered taboo. In fact, the LGBTQ+ family is "in" while heterosexual families are considered the enemy. White, male, heterosexuals are the epitome of evil and must be vanquished from our families including the military. Planned Parenthood is in while giving birth to normal babies is considered unscientific. Science today is cutting parts off boys and making them girls. She makes reading exciting again!

Her chapter on the "Destruction of Religion" is worth the price of the book (which may be ordered via Amazon). How Mao brought Communist atheism to China is a study in itself. How American leftists, humanists, and reds seek to replace Christianity with the religion of WOKEISM is another study in itself. Hint, it has something to do with John Dewey and the Frankfurt School (hid at Columbia University). And the present-day DEI crowd.

Speaking of WOKEISM, hang your turban on this: "In 2019, the Southern Baptist Convention (SBC)—the world's largest Baptist denomination, the largest Protestant denomination, and the second largest Christian denomination in the United States, according to Wikipedia—passed what is known as Resolution 9, which affirms CRT [Critical Race Theory] and intersectionality [something to do with the Tower of Babel I believe] as analytical tools to understand multifaceted social dynamics [translation—proof that America is the worse nation in the history of the world]. By endorsing CRT, SBC sent a dangerous message to the Christian world and wider society." (p. 233)

To take some heat off the SBC, Miss Van Fleet does mention that SBC pastor Voddie Baucham has written a book on CRT which he identifies as "cultural Marxism." It would be interesting to know if his book is in the SBC bookstores! My guess is it probably isn't. But then being a skeptic that I am it might be.

Really, there isn't a page in this book that isn't worth reading and digesting. The infiltration of America's colleges and universities is right up there with reading Revelation 18 and the fall of Babylon the Great! Harvard and Yale have fallen! Ivy league has fallen! Colorado Springs two-year so-called colleges have fallen! America's educational experience is a study in treachery.

In closing let me say this about our author—"She now devotes her time and energy full-time to warning about the parallels between Mao's Cultural Revolution in China and what's unfolding in America today." Let's join her!

The Elite Reds and the Street Reds

by David A. Noebel

I like Jesse Kelly! I like to watch his TV program on The First network. I like his sense of humor. I like his Marine background (my brother was a Marine). And I think he is on to something on his understanding of Communism. I also like his latest book published by Simon and Schuster, Inc. entitled The Anti-Communist Manifesto.

Kelly insists there are only two kinds or types of Reds—the Elite Reds and the Street Reds. How can you identify the Elite Reds? By watching who support the Street Reds! Well then, who are the Street Reds? How about Black Lives Matter?...how about Antifa?

“BLM and Antifa are explicitly communist. They are the Red Guards of the American communist movement—the foot soldiers of the revolution. The language they speak is violence and destruction. The battlefield on which they fight is the streets of your city or hometown. Their goal is no different than that of their comrades in past generations: to destroy everything before them and replace it with their own chaotic hellhole.” (p. 88)

Well then who supports these street Red Guards? The elite Reds? How about Ben & Jerry’s ice cream (p.109). “One of BLM’s biggest charitable supporters has been the NoVo Foundation. Funded by Warren Buffett, chairman and CEO of Berkshire Hathaway, and controlled by his son Peter, the foundation contributed $1.5 million to BLM and associated organizations between 2015 and 2018 (p. 114).

“The W.K.Kellogg Foundation has also been cutting checks for BLM. The foundation is funded in large part through its ownership stake in the Kellogg Company (and its Frosted Flakes and Eggo waffles).” (p. 114)

“In July 2020, Amazon announced that Black Lives Matter was among twelve organizations . . .that would receive $10 million from the online retail company.” (p. 114)

“Other corporations and brands that openly support BLM include DoorDash, Gatorade, Microsoft, and Airbnb.” (p. 114)

Now once the Street Reds (BLM and Antifa among others including college thugs) are arrested for burning down city streets etc. who springs them loose to continue their destruction? You guessed it, the elite Reds including George Soros!

“For the past several years, billionaire George Soros has been openly pumping tens of millions of dollars into numerous district attorney races across the country... Soros expresses no regret for the chaos and violence that he has invited through his funding of weak DAs. In fact, he has promised to do more.” (p.117)

Most of Kelly’s work is focused on the elite Reds. For example, he has a neat chapter on “Climate Communism: Green on the Outside, Red on the Inside.” (p.154) Another chapter on “American Red-ucation” tracing the Reds move into our universities and colleges (and now high schools and grade schools). (p. 121)

But his chapter on how American corporations were consumed into the Red agenda is worth the price of the book. He labels the chapter “Corporate Communism: The Devil’s Alliance.” (p.219)

For a taste of Kelly’s treatment I quote, “The Walt Disney Company, once a reliable source of child-friendly content, now churns out what many would consider propaganda that celebrates sexual deviance, publicly supports woke political causes, and has turned its back on American families.” (p. 220)

“Today, Milton Friedman’s worst nightmare has come to pass. CSR (Corporate Social Responsibility) became the springboard from which the communist conquered corporate America—the glue that holds the devil’s alliance together.” (p.230) “It (CSR) infects the most classic of American companies like Disney and Coca-Cola. Professional sports leagues like the National Football League and Major League Baseball, energy giants like ExxonMobil and Chevron, finance giants like Bank of America and Morgan Stanley.” (p.230)

“Walk into your local big-box store during Pride Month [June] and you’ll find rack upon rack of rainbow clothes. If you’re lucky enough to live near a Target store, your children can even purchase gender-affirming clothing...Need a jolt of caffeine in the morning? Buy yourself a venti racial equity latte at Starbucks. Hungry for dinner? Pick up a Black Lives Matter burger at your local McDonald’s, Burger King, or Wendy’s, all of which signaled their support for the organization.” (p. 232)

Concludes Kelly: “The corporate-communist alliance has turned big businesses into nests of communist activity and a bullhorn for his propaganda. Whereas corporations once powered American prosperity, they are now actively undermining it at every turn.” (p. 239)

You may not agree with Jesse Kelly on everything he touches, but my bet is you will agree with most of his conclusions. It doesn’t take a genius to see that America is in big dodo. Our debt alone can destroy the country. The hordes coming over the border by the millions can destroy the country. Our feckless politicians can destroy the country. Come to think about it I can too if I remain silent!

BURN, BABY, BURN

by Pete McArdle

In the movie The Dark Knight, Bruce Wayne (the Batman) confides to his butler Alfred that he's having trouble anticipating the psychotic Joker's next move and figuring out his motives.

Alfred blinks his owlish, bespectacled eyes, and then, in his British accent, says, "Some men aren't looking for anything logical, like money. They can't be bought, bullied, reasoned, or negotiated with. Some men just want to watch the world burn."

So true.

And with that excellent answer, Alfred the butler has just educated the rather naïve Master Wayne on the presence of pure evil in our world.

Doing bad just for the fun of it.

Sacrilege for sacrilege's sake.

This brings me to our sad, decaying country, led by our sad, decaying president and his Deep State/media minions.

Let's pretend for a moment that you're a naïve bleeding-heart, albeit quite muscular, orphan like Bruce. (I was an orphan; therefore, by The New Rules, I can say orphan.) And I'll be Alfred. Ancestry DNA says I'm overwhelmingly British, plus I'm paler than freshly bleached bedsheets.

You start.

Why would the people in power leave our country open for anyone in the world to waltz in and potentially bring with them terrorism, crime, disease, drugs, a welfare mentality, and illiteracy?

Me: Because some men just want to watch the world burn.

Why would politicians, academicians, and the media labor strenuously to convince minority children that they're helpless victims of an unjust system, while telling white kids they're the problem, whether they know it or not?

Because some men just want to watch the world burn.

On the subject of kids, why on Earth would our leaders, child psychologists, and medical "experts" allow minors—who, last time I checked, are not allowed to smoke cigarettes, drink booze, own guns, or drive a car—to take dangerous hormones, amputate their penises or breasts, and consign themselves to a life without procreation or sexual pleasure?

Because some men wanna watch the world burn, that's why.

Can you explain to me why certain of our public health experts helped fund the Wuhan, China lab that synthesized COVID-19, then lied about that, then tried to float a narrative that the bug came from eating pangolins or bats, and then attacked anyone trying to tell the truth about the disease's origin?

And why these same supposed caregivers, along with their political compañeros, made up social distancing; promoted useless (against aerosolized viruses) paper and cloth masks; and mandated improperly tested vaccines that, while failing to prevent the acquisition or spread of disease, did and continue to do grave damage to the poor souls who trustingly bared their arms for multiple injections?

Because some men just...well, you know the rest.

OK, please explain this. Why would anyone who purportedly cares about the welfare of his parents, spouse, or children, not to mention his fellow man, think it's a good idea to hamstring law enforcement while making it easier for criminals to roam the streets? Or useful to allow the mentally ill to roam the subways while arresting good Samaritans seeking to protect their fellow riders? Or prudent to allow some folks to riot, causing deaths, injuries and destruction—even during a pandemic—while other folks go to prison for a long, long time for taking a walk in the Capitol, with the Capitol Police kindly opening the doors and providing tours?

And why would our leaders make it ridiculously easy to cheat in our elections? When elections used to be decided on Election Night, why must we now wait days or weeks for early, late, remote, harvested, no-ID, or cured votes to be counted? And why does our entire court system studiously look the other way if so much alleged cheating is occurring?

BSMJWTWTWB, that's why!

Well, can you explain to me why some people, who can't even accurately predict tomorrow's weather, want to build costly solar farms and bird-killing windmills that produce negligible energy, and under the wrong circumstances, none? And why the most dedicated environmentalists want us to eat bugs instead of steaks, to have sex but not children, and to turn down our heat but raise the A.C.—all this while they—the environmentalists, not the bugs—fly their private jets or yacht their way around the world to tony conferences ostensibly committed to saving the planet?

#WatchTheWorldBurn

And could someone, for God's sake, explain to me how anyone can justify ripping an unborn baby from its mother's womb? And while you're at it, tell me how something that hurts society—mother, the father, and most definitely the baby—could possibly be called reproductive health care instead of filicide? While there are circumstances where an abortion is an unfortunate necessity, why would anyone promote, facilitate, or celebrate it?

Because...well, you know the rest.

I could go on forever, but I'm old and, although marginally wiser, must get my rest. Suffice it to say that evil walks freely along our mountains and valleys, and across our fruited plains.

We've got cocaine in the White House, a demented grifter in the Oval Office, and a man exposing his fake breasts on the South Lawn.

We help a totally corrupt country fight to a stalemate with an equally corrupt aggressor; we equate the ruthless, rapacious thugs of Hamas with Israelis fighting to survive; and we look the other way while China steals us blind.

We pretend our president's not deep-fried; our deficit's not a ticking time-bomb; and it's OK that our kids can't really read, write, or take their faces out of a screen.

We look the other way as the Uniparty, federal law enforcement, the media, academia, and left-wing attorney generals and courts all abuse Donald Trump, an American citizen, worse perhaps than anyone in US history.

That's evil, folks. That's bad.

And sadly, other than tending to your own garden, I have no solutions to offer. For these men who are destroying our once great country can't be bought, bullied, reasoned or negotiated with. They just want to watch the world burn.

The Gospel of Bitcoin

by Fay Voshell

A recent tweet published by James Saylor, executive chairman of MicroStrategy, represents him as having laser eyes, his head surrounded by a Bitcoin halo.

While doubtless Saylor's portrayal of himself is partly humorous, his laser eyes suggest a person who is gifted with supernatural insight into the truth. The portrait reminds one of Jesus, who is described by St. John's Revelation as having eyes like a "flame of fire."

Certainly, Saylor, who was a speaker at the Bitcoin Atlantis conference held this March in Madeira, is a passionate advocate of Bitcoin. The convert from skeptic to "maximalist" and then to prophet now spreads the good news of Bitcoin.

His speech promoted the gospel of Bitcoin in language reminiscent of a Billy Graham crusade. The metaphysics of the cryptocurrency resembled a secularized version of the prosperity gospel preached by some televangelists.

Saylor relies heavily on the revelations of Bitcoin's mysterious founder, Satoshi Nakamoto, whose golden image can be found in Budapest, Hungary. Nakamoto is also presented as a Christlike figure. Having discerned the inherently evil and thus irredeemable nature of money and existing institutions, Nakamoto found a way to cleanse the earthly temples in thrall to Mammon. Moving currency into the digitalized ether of cyberspace via the Word of algorithms removed the filth from earthly lucre.

As Saylor put it, "Put your money in cyberspace, where it is not subject to weather, war, or supply chains." Bitcoin removes humanity's treasures from corrupt and useless "analogue wealth" like real estate, gold, and silver, converting such capital into "digital property conveyed by digital power."

The new form of money is sheer unpolluted energy, the foundation of a shining city in cyberspace. The entrance to that shining city has a fee: the sacred money of Bitcoin, which is Mammon transformed into a sanctified "forever" currency, having all the characteristics of the treasures described by Christ in heaven, "where moth and rust do not corrupt nor thieves break in and steal." (Nor doth the tax collector come.)

Saylor's evangelistic sermon echoed the famous lines from Genesis concerning the created world: in the beginning, there was Bitcoin, and it was good.

Bitcoin is not mere earthly Mammon exchanged for goods and services, but the means of salvation, a token of entrance into a newly created world in which true believers find complete freedom and equality. Bitcoin purges toxicity (once known as "sin") from a monetary and financial system irredeemably infected with toxic money housed within toxic institutions. It even ends wars by beating the weapons of corrupt capitalism into the plowshares of cryptocurrency residing in inviolable and eternal cyberspace.

Bitcoin divides people, like the gospel example of the sheep and the goats, into two categories: those who understand and accept Bitcoin theology and those who do not. Blessed are they who do understand, for they will inherit the Shining City in Cyberspace, the streets of which are paved not with gold, but with Bitcoin.

Saylor wound up his Madeira sermon, where he was forced to live outside the gleaming gates of the Shining City by occupying material and temporal quarters for a brief time, with an altar call resembling that of an evangelistic crusade:

Bitcoin divides people, like the gospel example of the sheep and the goats, into two categories: those who understand and accept Bitcoin theology and those who do not. Blessed are they who do understand, for they will inherit the Shining City in Cyberspace, the streets of which are paved not with gold, but with Bitcoin.

Saylor wound up his Madeira sermon, where he was forced to live outside the gleaming gates of the Shining City by occupying material and temporal quarters for a brief time, with an altar call resembling that of an evangelistic crusade: "This is a spiritual journey and at the final point, you become an advocate. It's not just you're all in, you want to go tell other people. You want to convince your company, your church, your government, your friends, your family. You're an advocate."

In other words, “go ye into all the world and preach the gospel of Bitcoin.”

The ultimate destination for the Bitcoin disciple/investor is a mansion in cyberspace, an eternal building in Bitcoin’s “Shining City.” As Saylor puts it, Bitcoin is not so much a currency as a “billion-dollar building in cyberspace.”

BlackRock’s Larry Fink agrees, stating that one should see Bitcoin as an asset for storage of wealth rather than a currency. Translation: Bitcoin’s cyber-mansions are an alternative to banks for storage of wealth. But meanwhile, we are assured that the push for central bank digitalized currencies will continue.

Saylor presents an enticing religious narrative. But one must wonder how real those forever buildings in the “Shining City” of cyberspace are. One might be a tad suspicious about the prospect of investing in a cyberspace mansion, even one decorated with bored ape art.

Above all, one might be hesitant to invest sovereign currencies in projects that have no attachment whatever to earthly institutions or materiality. Governed as they are by admittedly flawed human beings and as much as they need reform, nonetheless, at least governments, banks, and churches are placed on Earth.

Haven’t we have seen other cities living only in the imaginations of their creators lure investors into emptying their pockets? We have seen modern castles in the sky constructed from Ponzi schemes. We are aware of the old maps drawn up showing the way to the city of El Dorado. We also have seen the futuristic architectural plans for sci-fi cities located on Mars.

Above all, we doubt the wisdom of investing in a “Shining City” whose founders promote anarcho-capitalism, belief in which promotes the complete destruction of all earthly institutions in order to build an imagined utopia in cyberspace, a place where anarchy reigns.

As Timothy C. May wrote as far back in time as 1994: “The Net is an anarchy. . . . This truism is the core of crypto anarchy. No central control, no ruler, no leader (except by example, reputation), no ‘laws.’ No single nation controls the Net, no administrative body sets policy.”

In other words, anarcho-capitalism requires that everyone move away from all existing institutions. It requires migration to a new fantasy home in cyberspace ether, where anonymity reigns, guaranteeing not equality of economic opportunity, but erasure of material existence. Since there is no meaningful attachment to the current world, the only life left would be an existence in which one’s tokenized self lives forever in a tokenized Potemkin cyber-village in the Cloud.

It is a peculiar and dangerous thing to advance economic instruments detached from the material world and its institutions. It is odd to be persuaded to invest and perhaps even live in a pseudo-spiritualized cyber-city in which cyber-monies are created from a mystical formulas of seemingly irreproachable mathematics magically transformed into economic energies. It is amazing to see “work” defined as “mining,” which evaporates much needed and increasingly scarce energy.

In sum, it’s hard not to suspect that the “Shining City” is an illusion and the monies being poured into the “forever” cyber-buildings are simply being siphoned off from sovereign national currencies into global enterprises determined to supplant national entities and their sovereign currencies—especially the dollar.

How ironic that some who are the architects of eternal investments to be placed in a fantasy cyber-“Shining City” also are among those who ridicule the idea of the eternal city of New Jerusalem, believers in which seek to heed Christ’s words to invest in the eternal treasures of Heaven.

Oppenheimer— Member of Secret Party by Lloyd Billingsley

Last Sunday, Oppenheimer tallied seven Academy Awards, awards, including best director (Christopher Nolan), actor (Cillian Murphy) and best picture, but there’s more to the story that people should know. For all its undeniable artistry—Bruce Bawer called it a “Dishonest Masterpiece”—Oppenheimer is something like those 1960s beach and bikini movies; what they reveal is interesting but what they conceal is crucial. Consider this perspective from one of Oppenheimer’s students.

“As a physics graduate student at Princeton University in the early 1960s, I had occasional interactions with Oppenheimer, who was then the director of the Institute for Advanced Studies,” writes William Happer, emeritus profess of physics at Princeton and a specialist in radiofrequency spectroscopy of atoms and molecules, radiation propagation in the atmosphere, and spin-polarized atoms and nuclei.

According to Happer, Oppenheimer was not very friendly to students but remained a “sympathetic figure.” Oppenheimer had an “easy act to follow” when he took over from Gregory Breit in 1943, but there is no Gregory Breit character in the movie. Tom Conti plays Albert Einstein but according to Happer, the Manhattan

Project was “not the result of a brilliant theory” and not made possible by Einstein’s  $E = mc^2$  formula. What made it possible, Happer explains, was “a rapid-fire series of accidental experimental discoveries in the 1930s, including a celebrated mistake.”

In 1932, James Chadwick discovered the electrically neutral projectile, the neutron, which could reach the surface of even the most highly-charged nucleus, uranium, with no hindrance from the nuclear charge. As Happer notes, “It was this accidental discovery that led to the Manhattan Project.” Chadwick, a Nobel laureate for physics in 1936, was part of the Manhattan project and in 1944 lived at Los Alamos with his family. In Oppenheimer, nobody plays Chadwick, hardly the only significant omission.

In the early going, Oppenheimer tells a hostile government committee that his testimony should be understood in the context of his life and work. Context is also important for movies, but Oppenheimer keeps key back stories off the screen.

Viewers see the “Hitler Invades Poland” headline from September 1, 1939, but do not see or hear anything about Stalin invading Poland on September 17, 1939. This joint invasion started WWII and came about because of the Stalin-Hitler pact of August 23, 1939. Viewers see nothing about the Pact, and no headline such as “Stalin Invades Finland,” on November 30, 1939.

Under the Pact, Nazi and Soviet intelligence forces collaborated and Stalin handed hundreds of Jewish Communists over to the Gestapo. Jewish scientists in America would have been aware of that deadly exchange, but not a word in Oppenheimer.

Viewers never learn that for nearly the first two years of the war, the Communist Party USA collaborated with pro-Nazi groups in America and did everything in its power to keep America out of the conflict. In Oppenheimer, no Communist is asked to account for what he or she did during the Pact, and why they stayed in the Party after many others left, never to return.

Oppenheimer portrays Party members as misguided liberals concerned about the conflict in Spain. Viewers hear about “the brigades” but no character explains that the Abraham Lincoln Brigades were a Communist Party militia that opposed anti-Franco groups such as the Partido Obrero de Unificación Marxista. The POUM fighters included George Orwell, author of 1984, Animal Farm, and Homage to Catalonia.

Inquiries about Oppenheimer’s “left wing” associations fail to note that the Party had an open and secret membership, as Whittaker Chambers detailed in Witness. John Earl Haynes and Harvey Klehr cite evidence that Oppenheimer was a member of a secret Party unit at UC Berkeley, where his friend Haakon Chevalier, a professor of French literature, was an active Communist. In the movie, Jefferson Hall plays Chevalier, and Oppenheimer resists his request to pass information to the Soviets.

From 1941-1944, Stalin’s top spy in California was Gregory Kheifetz operating undercover as a vice consul in San Francisco. Tasked with obtaining atomic secrets, Kheifetz claimed in a cable that Oppenheimer was one of his recruits. Unfortunately, there is no Gregory Kheifetz character in Oppenheimer.

The film does reveal that Klaus Fuchs (Christopher Denham), present at Los Alamos, was in fact a Soviet spy. So were American Stalinists Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, and Ethel’s brother David Greenglass, was a machinist at Los Alamos. There is no Greenglass character in Oppenheimer. Viewers do not learn that the Communist spies helped Stalin explode his first atom bomb on August 29, 1949.

By that time, Stalin had taken over Czechoslovakia, held Eastern Europe captive, and launched a purge of writers and artists. Stalin also swung the USSR and captive states back to traditional anti-Semitism, branding Jews “rootless cosmopolitans.” As director Robert Rossen (All the King’s Men) noted in congressional testimony, the defendants in Czechoslovakian show trials were executed “for being Jews and nothing else.”

Stalin died on March 5, 1953. More than 70 years later in 2024, virulent anti-Semitism finds a voice in the American left. Calls to free Palestine “from the river to the sea,” are calls to kill Jews for being Jews and nothing else. Someone should make a movie about it. The struggle against a second Holocaust is the struggle of memory against forgetting.

Duty, Honor, Country

by James Poplar

By now I suspect many of you have heard that Gen. Douglas MacArthur’s call to the Corps of cadets in 1962 has been banished from the United States Military Academies (USMA) mission statement and exchanged for the more amorphous phase “Army Values.”

The new mission statement, according to a news release from the academy, is: “To build, educate, train, and inspire the Corps of Cadets to be commissioned leaders of character committed to the Army Values and ready for a lifetime of professional excellence and service to the Army and Nation.”

In a message to “West Point Teammates,” the Superintendent of the USMA “Supe” Gilland addressed the reason for the change. “Duty, Honor, Country is foundational to the United States Military Academy's culture and will always remain our motto," he wrote. "It defines who we are as an institution and as graduates of West Point."

Gilland went on to recount that the academy had engaged in an 18-month review of its purpose and strategy, working with West Point leaders and stakeholders. It then recommended the mission statement change to the Army's top leadership. He noted that both Secretary of the Army Christine Wormuth and Army Chief of Staff Gen. Randy George approved the change. Gilland argued that Army values "include Duty and Honor and Country."

Although I am not a graduate of West Point, I am a thirty-four-year member of the Profession of Arms and a graduate of the United States Army War College, I find this quite disturbing for a number of reasons.

All of the branches our military, be they the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Air Force are built on bedrock ideals that stand the test of time and serve as their north star, especially during armed combat. The Marine Corps whose motto "Semper Fidelis" Always Faithful has never wavered from its roots and consequently has not experienced the recruiting issues some of our more progressive military service are suffering from today.

Here is Duty, Honor, Country as laid out by Gen. Douglas MacArthur on May 12, 1962 at West Point:

Today I went back and listened to Gen. MacArthur's entire speech given in 1962 and it is indeed prophetic. It was if he could see the handwriting on the wall.

"Duty, honor, country: Those three hallowed words reverently dictate what you ought to be, what you can be, what you will be. . . .The unbelievers will say they are but words, but a slogan, but a flamboyant phrase. Every pedant, every demagogue, every cynic, every hypocrite, every troublemaker, and I am sorry to say, some others of an entirely different character, will try to downgrade them even to the extent of mockery and ridicule."

In addition, in this farewell speech to the Corps of Cadets, MacArthur prophetically warned us to be wary of the expansion of the federal bureaucracy, our nation's ever-increasing debt, and many of the other issues that are currently thwarting our leadership of the free world. I suspect while fighting against the Chinese communists in Korea he saw the eventual rise of the Peoples Republic of China and its goal of world hegemony.

So yes, Gen. MacArthur, you were correct over sixty years ago. We appear to now be a nation that unfortunately reviles its past, has lost its way, and is on the precipice of decline. Perhaps we should have listened to your wisdom and clairvoyance more intently on the Plains of West Point.

Climate Change Fraud

by Andrea Widburg

I received an email from the Art of Liberty Foundation suggesting that we watch a free video about the truth behind Climate Change hysteria. Knowing that there are a lot of well-intentioned but boring, confusing, or simply amateurish movies out there regarding the climate, I approached this with trepidation. I need not have worried. The movie is wonderful. Watch it, share it with open-minded friends, and store up its arguments for those times when the climatistas try to shut you down.

Climate The Movie (The Cold Truth) came out in 2023 but is now available for free, in high definition, on YouTube. In a mere 80 minutes (so you don't have to sign away hours of your life to watch it), you will be inundated with accessible data told through interviews with enormously prestigious scientists and people who worked in the climate change field, actual data often generated by the climatistas themselves, and a clearly presented narrative about the Earth's climate history and the political and economic uses driving today's hysteria.

The movie is well-organized and intelligent, as well as being leavened with gentle humor, mostly through archival footage. I can't figure out who the narrator is, but he has a gorgeous voice, which helps.

But don't listen to me; watch it yourself:

As an added benefit, if you click over to YouTube, you'll see that YouTube has appended the usual propaganda to the movie, sending people to the United Nations to learn about the same views that the movie debunks. The irony is killing.
